The design, planning and construction industry contains a large set of actors who depend on each other. The more complex the processes and the higher the demands, the more differentiated and sometimes even more confusing is the cooperation. You work hand in hand - even if you are in competition with each other. 'Collaboration' is the slogan. Successful are those who see the interplay between planning, construction and utilization as a whole, analyzing it for the decisive structural, ecological and economic factors and acting accordingly. So how is it going on? How do we shape our common future?

Three different and exiting players such as architect Francis Kéré, Kéré Architecture from Berlin; Charles Renfro, Diller Scofidio + Renfro New York; as well as Matthias Schuler, Transsolar Stuttgart, Munich, New York, Paris, each talk about their own work and afterwards in panel discussion on 'Collaboration, all together or everyone on his own' led by Judit Solt, Editor-in-Chief Tec21.
